Brief description of the research areas:

The PhD course in "Learning Sciences and Digital Technologies" (<https://phd-lesdit.eu/>) is designed to investigate the relationships between technologies and social and material contexts in educational processes. PhD students will study the pedagogical and neuroscientific foundations of learning, the main pedagogical-educational theories and digital design with the aim of developing new technologies, analysing large-scale educational data, designing educational and docimological methods.

Particular attention is given to the topic of training of individuals with disabilities and special educational needs in formal, informal or non-formal contexts and to educational and rehabilitation strategies in fragile or disadvantaged social groups. Issues related to legal profiles concerning data management and privacy protection and to the gender perspective, equity and well-being in relations between individuals and within organisations will be addressed. Of relevance is the topic of emerging and innovative technologies and their impact on teaching and learning processes, both from the point of view of application and the development of original solutions and tools.

Those enrolled in the PhD course in 'Learning Sciences and Digital Technologies' will be able to explore the use of technologies for solving complex problems by conducting theoretical and empirical studies. They will develop specialist knowledge through participation in relevant research projects involving both the academic and industrial/professional communities. In fact, participation in research projects conducted within the laboratories and research centres belonging to the proposing universities and institutes, the laboratories of affiliated institutions (industry, schools, hospitals, clinical centres-IRCCS) and public and/or private research institutes will be promoted. This will enable them to address, through research, issues that have important repercussions on the wellbeing of individuals and on active participation in a variety of contexts; it will also enable them to develop skills in the construction of research projects and in the use of the results obtained for the implementation of interventions and good practices capable of transforming training actions also from an inclusive perspective.

Students will thus be able to apply the outcomes of theoretical or application/technical work in technology-mediated innovation aimed at promoting educational experiences that enhance the quality of life of children, adolescents, adults and the elderly in differentiated settings. At the same time, doctoral students will have the opportunity to identify solutions for employing the potential of digital technologies in the creation and management of bonds, relationships and forms of participatory sociality in learning, social and organisational contexts.

The course has been constructed with the awareness that design, social and contextual variables of learning, educational sciences, neuroscience, cognitive and developmental psychology and special pedagogy are fundamental elements in rethinking education in real and virtual environments and in special educational contexts.

Each student will work on an application project in the technological area on topics such as: programming, digital animation, simulation, robotics, interaction design, serious games, tangible interfaces, application of AI modules for learning environments, development of applications to foster learning processes in clinical and atypical populations, augmented reality, digital and data literacy.

The PhD is divided into 3 curricula: e-Teaching & e-Learning, ETEL; Technology Enhanced Learning & Advanced Technologies for Education, TEL-ATE; New Literacies & Digital Citizenship, NELIT. Without losing the interdisciplinary character of the course, they focus on different areas of study, such as, in brief: (1) teaching procedures, (2) technological innovations, (3) ethics, citizenship and digital skills.

The training plan will be built in the constant dialogue between theory and practice to promote students' creativity in the constant confrontation with real problems. Cross-curriculum training activities will cover research methodology, scientific communication, entrepreneurship and competitive bidding. Workshop experiences will bring together disciplinary knowledge on specific problems.

The training will be delivered in a blended mode (online max. 40%); the collaboration of lecturers from international universities and research centres will be encouraged in the delivery of teaching activities, which will be delivered in English up to a maximum of 70% of the entire curriculum.

Brief description of the research areas referred to in the PNRR (M.D. 629 and M.D. 630 of 2024):

The PhD in "Learning Sciences and Digital Technologies" aims to train the next generation of researchers and experts in the field of design of new learning environments and new teaching and learning methodologies.

The doctoral course will focus on educational innovation in formal, informal and non-formal contexts: from school, to industry, to leisure, with a specific focus on lifelong learning. The PhD aims to represent a national and international reference point in the field of application, through a network of laboratories located in the main Italian universities. Characteristic of the doctorate lies in its multi and transdisciplinary connotation with contaminations from the hard sciences and humanities. The board of teachers will be composed of members from the fields of psychology, pedagogy, law, neuroscience, computer science and engineering.

The PhD course proposal is consistent with the specific PNRR objectives of the call in question: the reference is to the strengthening of research and dissemination of innovative models for basic and applied research conducted in synergy between universities and businesses; in fact, by decree, the new innovative doctorates are intended to increase the effectiveness of the actions of public administrations, which are below the average of the main European partners, affecting the share of staff with high specialisations in STEM subjects (Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics), which is significantly lower than humanities and law subjects.

The doctorate in "Learning Sciences and Digital Technologies" is consistent with "M4C1.4 REFORM AND STRENGTHENING OF DOCTORATES", with particular regard to Investment 4.1: "Extension of the number of doctorates and innovative doctorates for public administration and cultural heritage" and Investment 3.3: "Introduction of innovative doctorates that respond to the innovation needs of companies and promote the recruitment of researchers from companies".

Consistency is particularly expressed in the promotion of new professional figures based on high-profile skills required in the labour market. The proposal of the doctoral route is to promote innovative and frontier figures, with the ability to actively collaborate with specialists from different fields, thanks to high-profile knowledge of different materials. The background and focus remain learning enhancement, with specialists able to design, implement and evaluate innovative learning and teaching environments, using new technologies in a coherent and conscious process starting from well-situated methodologies. Compared to the PNRR measure referred to in the paragraph, the proposal clearly captures one of the 'Key Enabling Technologies' and in particular Artificial Intelligence (AI). This KET is part of the curriculum 'Educational AI: intelligent systems, social and educational robotics, machine learning, bots and personal digital assistants' that specifically refers to the application of AI in educational settings and the well-focused use of new technologies in education and teaching. In addition to the specific focus of the call, the PhD may have a transversal impact on PNRR Mission 4 'Education and Research'.

The doctorate will train new employees capable of designing, managing, updating and evaluating the deficiencies of learning environments. The doctorate will train new staff members able to design, manage, update and evaluate the deficiencies of learning environments, particularly with regard to the application of digital technologies, bridging existing gaps and applying sustainable solutions. Specifically, the figures have a direct impact on M4-C1.2 "Improving teacher recruitment and training processes" as it activates professionals able to promote the development of digital competences of school staff to foster an accessible, inclusive and intelligent approach to digital education, through the design of learning environments, starting from the DigiCompEdu framework. Similarly, the impact is also evident in M4-C1.3 'Expanding skills and enhancing infrastructures' in that it proposes professionals who are able to do advanced training in teacher education in universities with a view to improving digital and STEM skills as proposed by the investment "New skills and new languages".

The PhDs will support School 4.0 through the transformation of school spaces in the direction of connected learning environments and the management and design of technologically advanced laboratories. Finally, the focus of the course will be on highlighting, addressing and countering the dimensions of gender difference and stigmatisation in the organisation of study, teaching, work and service provision.

ARTICLE 10 - Rights and Responsibilities of PhD Students

PhD Programs require a full-time and exclusive commitment. PhD students may accept forms of employment, pending authorization from the PhD Program Teaching Committee, related to work activities useful for the acquisition of skills pertaining to the PhD research area, after evaluation of compatibility of those activities with the fruitful development of the educational, didactic and research activities of the PhD course.

PhD students are required to perform the research projects assigned to them and to be involved in related study, further research, periods abroad, teaching, as well as any internships affiliated with public or private bodies, in accordance with the requirements set by the competent Teaching Committee. Students who fail to comply may be withdrawn from the program.

The provisions in art.15 regulate the other responsibilities and rights of doctoral students, including incompatibility, exemption from the obligation to attend, and the conditions of exclusion, as well as the procedure for awarding the PhD of this competition.

Further specific obligations may be assigned to the recipients of PhD scholarships awarded by the founding of MD no. 629/2024 and MD no. 630/2024, which may be notified by the Ministry of University and Research. In particular, they must report their activities every six months in the ministerial database. Failure to do so may result in the University requesting the return of the PhD scholarships awarded in the last year in progress.

ARTICLE 11 – Public employees

In accordance with the law, public employees admitted to PhD courses are placed on special leave for study purposes without allowance for the duration of the course and are entitled to a scholarship if the required conditions are met. In the event of admission to a PhD course without a scholarship, or if the scholarship is renounced (if envisaged by the type of scholarship awarded), the person on leave retains the salary, social security and pension benefits enjoyed by the public administration with which the employment relationship is established.

If, after obtaining the PhD, the employment relationship with the public administration is interrupted at the employee's request within the following two years, the sums paid pursuant to the second sentence shall be reimbursed.

A civil servant who has already obtained a doctoral degree or has been enrolled on PhD courses for at least one year, benefiting from the leave, shall not be entitled to extraordinary leave with or without pay.

The period of special leave is useful for the purposes of career progression, retirement and social security.

ARTICLE 12 – Awarding of the PhD

The PhD is awarded upon completion of the PhD Program, when students pass their final examination that consists in the presentation of a PhD Thesis on an original research, carried out meticulously and where results are adequately and scientifically relevant. Should the assessment be negative, the final examination cannot be repeated.

Thesis defence will take place before an Examination Board appointed in compliance with the University PhD Research Program Regulations.

The Rector awards the title of PhD. The issue of the above title is dependent upon the candidate's submission to the competent office of the copy of the final thesis in digital format, which will be guaranteed to be kept and publicly accessible in the special open access archive of the University, as well as to be deposited in the ministerial database, in compliance with the regulations in force concerning thesis embargo and copyright.

Upon completion of the PhD program, graduates will be invited to fill out a “Questionnaire on the opinions of program attendees” for the AlmaLaurea database. This will enable the AlmaLaurea Inter-University Consortium to monitor the training of PhD students.

ARTICLE 13 – Handling of personal data
